Mattie has experience in a wide variety of complex litigation matters, including representing and advising regulated entities and trade associations in litigation related to regulatory registrations for biotechnical and agricultural products; and representing medical providers in disputes with commercial payers. Mattie represents clients in state and federal court, and in many phases of litigation, including discovery, motion practice, settlement negotiations, mediations, and appeals.

In her managed care and commercial payer dispute practice, Mattie represents health care providers in administrative appeals and managed care litigation. Her work in this context frequently involves analyzing compliance with ERISA, the Medicare Advantage program, and the Medicare Secondary Payer Act. She has represented a national health care provider in both state and federal court in disputes with commercial payers. Mattie's health care provider clients value the depth of her experience and knowledge of the industry, which give her valuable insight from initial litigation analysis through discovery and trial.

In the agricultural technology context, Mattie represents regulated entities and trade associations in litigation involving the defense of regulatory approvals of crop protection products and products of biotechnology regulated by EPA, FDA, and USDA in federal court, administrative tribunals, and arbitration.

Mattie also has extensive experience in general complex commercial litigation, including taking depositions, managing pre-trial discovery, and arguing discovery motions.

Client Work

Mattie's representative matters include:

- Representing a health care provider in a high-dollar-value network dispute in Hawaii state court, securing multiple summary judgment rulings against MultiPlan.
- Representing a health care provider in litigation involving claims for ERISA benefits and violations of the Medicare Secondary Payer Act, securing summary judgment against a large commercial health plan.
