Elizabeth most recently served on a multi-year US Department of Justice (DOJ) and Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) Foreign Corrupt Practices Act (FCPA) compliance monitorship of a Russian company and its more than 25 subsidiaries. As a part of the core monitorship team, Elizabeth assisted in creating a comprehensive compliance program for the company and drafted annual reports to the DOJ and SEC on the status of the company's anti-corruption compliance program. Elizabeth has also represented other international companies and individuals in matters related to the FCPA and labor and employment investigations.

Apart from her work in the Government Enforcement & White Collar Group, Elizabeth has worked on various litigations in federal and state courts involving contract disputes, music copyright, and commercial litigation. She has also counseled clients on Federal Trade Commission (FTC) and Digital Markets Act (DMA) compliance.

Elizabeth previously worked as a paralegal at a large international law firm for the intellectual property and patent litigation groups. During law school, she worked for the Vanderbilt Intellectual Property and the Arts Clinic, representing several pro bono clients. She focused on preparing federal trademark applications and advising clients on music license agreements and copyright issues.
